WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY

1726

The principle of wireless telegraphy is shown in the lower right-hand cut. The current from the cell (1) cannot pass to the bell (2) owing to the resistance offered by the coherer (3). But when the ether waves, impelled by the charged antennae, reach the coherer filings, they so affect them as to permit the current to pass and ring the bell.

EXPLANATORY

new Apr. 11 '12

Webster's New Standard American Dictionary is designed not merely as a ready-reference, spelling, pronouncing and defining lexicon, but also as a work that will enable a student of the language to compare and discriminate words of different derivation and trace them to their original sources.

One reason why the English Dictionary has never found a place in the schools as a text book is because lexicographers heretofore have failed to produce a work in which the words are deduced from their originals in a manner intelligible to the average student. Another reason is that the dictionary has been burdened with an accumulation of obsolete, archaic and rarely used words, serving no other purpose than to perplex or mislead.

Webster's New Standard American Dictionary carefully avoids these two drawbacks, the etymologies of all words derived from foreign sources being transliterated from foreign to English letters, and the usual aggregation of obsolete words omitted.

The Vocabulary contains not only all words in general use, but also such technical terms as recently have become commonly current by reason of progress made in aviation, motoring, geographic exploration, liberal and mechanic arts, social industries and scientific discoveries, together with the principal proper names in geography and mythology. Foreign Terms frequently used by English authors and in conversation are also included.

General Arrangement: The various styles of type used afford an easy means of distinguishing the different divisions and subdivisions of words. Verbs are divided into transitive and intransitive, and a parallel system is followed in the division of adjectives, adverbs and nouns.

All Words, including derivatives, are placed in strictly alphabetical order, spelled out in full, phonetically respelled (in parentheses), and fully defined, thus requiring no reference to some other word in the dictionary to determine the correct spelling, pronunciation or meaning.

Capital Initials: Only proper names and proper terms derived from them are printed with a large capital initial, which will enable anyone to determine at a glance when a word should invariably begin with a capital letter.

The Pronunciation is indicated by phonetic respellings marked in accordance with the diacritical system originated by Noah Webster, but simplified and brought into harmony with the latest developments in phonetics.

Whatever changes have been made are along the lines of simplification as recommended by Dr. Webster. In Noah Webster's large dictionary, and in the school dictionaries abridged therefrom, the pronunciation of words was indicated by marks placed over or under the letters as they stood in the vocabulary, instead of by phonetic respellings. This rendered necessary a number of different markings to indicate the same sound when represented by different letters.

When the method of indicating the pronunciation of words by phonetic respelling was introduced, the necessity for using more than one mark to indicate any one sound was obviated, as the same symbol could now be used, no matter by what letter or letters the sound is represented in the vocabulary; for instance, u with a dot under it for the sound of u in pull and for the sound of oo in wood. But regardless of this fact, the editors of some of the later editions of the old dictionaries have gone right along perpetuating this old confusion, by the use of a multiplicity of marks for the same sounds. And to make confusion worse confounded the same symbol is sometimes used by them to denote two entirely different sounds; for instance the mark (^) known as the broad or circumflex is used to indicate the vowel sound heard in fare and also that heard in storm. But the confusion does not end there. Not only are these two distinct sounds represented by the same mark, but another mark (¨) known as the two dots, is also used to indicate one of these sounds, as by being placed under the a in warm. And besides this complicated method of indicating the sounds there is an entire lack of system in the adoption of the marks. For example, the mark (~) called tilde, is placed over the letter e to indicate the sound of that letter heard in fern, while an entirely different mark (^) is placed over u to indicate the similar sound heard in burn. And this confusion and lack of uniformity and consistency is found throughout the entire series of markings. It is well nigh hopeless, therefore, to undertake the task of mastering the "key to pronunciation" in one of these old-style dictionaries.

But all this confusion of symbols is avoided, and the matter of mastering the key to pronunciation made simple and comprehensible in Webster's New Standard American Dictionary by the use of a uniform system of markings. In this system the same sounds are always represented by the same symbols, no matter how varied their actual representation in the language or whether the sound is prolonged by accentuation or not.

Mere modifications of accent are not marked as variations of sound, as is the case in other dictionaries, a practice which was denounced by Noah Webster as tending to confusion and mispronunciation. "The mischief of these notations," says Webster in the Introduction to his large American dictionary, "is that attempts are made to express minute distinctions or shades of sounds, so to speak, which cannot be represented to the eye by characters. From a careful attention to this subject, I am persuaded that all such notations are useless, and many of them mischievous, as they lead to a wrong pronunciation."

The fact that a vowel is unmarked indicates that its sound is short. All other vowel sounds being marked, it is entirely unnecessary to indicate the short sound. Every consonant used in the respelling for pronunciation always has its own peculiar, unvarying sound, none being employed that has more than one sound, with the exception of g, which always indicates its hard sound, heard in go. The sound of th, as in thick, is represented by common Roman letters, while italics indicate the sound as in the.

With this system of markings to work with, the teacher has merely to call the attention of the pupils to the general features of the system, and they at once make their own application to the particular instances. A key to the diacritical markings will be found at the foot of each page.

Definitions. Each word in the vocabulary is tersely and clearly defined with reference to every part of speech in which it can be properly used, the different shades of meaning being separated by Arabic figures and the various parts of speech by Roman numerals.

Transitive and Intransitive Verbs are separately defined, and their past tense and present and past participles always given, whether regularly or irregularly formed.

Degrees of Adjectives are given, particular attention being called to those degrees irregularly formed.

Plurals of Nouns are given when irregularly formed.

Synonyms, Antonyms, and an Addendum of Verbal Distinctions, including Homonyms, etc., have been embodied to meet the requirements of all students of literature and others who desire to be correct in the use of the English language, the principal synonyms being not only compared but contrasted with their antonyms throughout the book.

Etymologies are given in brackets after the definitions, all foreign letters being transliterated into English.

Illustrations: Over 2,000 instructive pictorial illustrations are contained in the text, including typical portraits of the peoples of the various nationalities, made especially for this work. Each text illustration is placed in direct connection with the word it illustrates—a system for which Webster's New Standard Dictionaries are noted. In addition to these features, there are a number of full-page plates (some of them printed in colors).

The Text is printed in large, clear type and the vocabulary words in bold black letters.

The Websterian System: In the production of this modern edition of Webster's American Dictionary of the English Language no credit is claimed for the simplified systems of spelling and diacritical marks employed, as these are the innovations of Noah Webster in his original work. Our task mainly has been to bring the work of the great American lexicographer abreast with the times, thus helping to establish, in the words of Webster, "a standard of our vernacular tongue, which we shall not be ashamed to bequeath to five-hundred millions of people who are destined to occupy the vast territory within our jurisdiction."

The Supplemental Dictionaries extend the scope of the work into the encyclopedic field, presenting the latest information concerning noted names in biography and fiction, notable places and buildings, inventions and discoveries, works of art, historical events, popular proverbs, law terms, foreign words and phrases, biblical names, Greek and Latin proper names, pseudonyms, and a complete presentation of the language of flowers.

PLURALS AND DERIVATIVES

In order that the student may form at pleasure such plurals and derivatives as are not usually given in Dictionaries the following rules governing their formation are here presented :

Rules for Forming Plurals

1. The plural of nouns is generally formed by adding s or es to the singular.
2. Words ending in a sound which will unite with the sound of s, form the plural by adding s only; as, bird, birds.
3. Words ending in a sound which will not unite with the sound of s, form the plural by adding es; as, box, boxes ; match, matches.
4. Words ending in silent e whose last sound will not combine with that of s, add s only ; as ace, aces; force, forces.
5. Most nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant, form the plural by the addition of es, as hero, heroes; but the following nouns are commonly written in the plural with s only: Albino, canto, Filipino, folio, grotto, junto, memento, motto, negrito, octavo, piano, Pueblo, quarto, salvo, solo, tyro and zero. There are also a few others with respect to which, however, usage is not uniform.
6. Several nouns ending in f or fe, change their termination into ves in the plural; as leaf, leaves ; knife, knives. Others, as chief, dwarf, grief, gulf, handkerchief, hoof, proof, roof, reproof, safe, scarf, surf, turf, and most of those ending in ff, form the plural regularly; as, gulf, gulfs ; muff, muffs. Staff has staves in the plural, but its compounds are regular, as, flagstaff, flagstaffs.
7. Nouns ending in y after a consonant form the plural by changing y into ies; as, lady, ladies. But nouns ending in y after a vowel form the plural regularly ; as day, days.
8. The plurals of the following nouns are variously formed : man, men ; woman, women ; child, children ; ox, oxen ; mouse, mice ; tooth, teeth ; goose, geese ; foot, feet ; brother, brothers or brethren ; die, dies (stamp for coining) ; die, dice (small cube for gaming) ; pea, peas (as distinct objects) ; pea, pease (collectively) ; penny, pence (in computation) ; penny, pennies (as distinct pieces of coin).
9. Words composed of an adjective and a noun, or of two nouns connected by a preposition, generally form the plural by adding s to the first words ; as court-martial, courts-martial ; son-in-law, sons-in-law. But spoonful, mouse-trap and other similar compounds form the plural regularly ; as, spoonfuls ; mouse-traps.
10. Letters and numeral figures are generally pluralized by adding an apostrophe and the letter s ; as, two a's ; three 5's.
11. Many nouns adopted from foreign languages retain their original plurals ; as, alumnus, alumni ; analysis, analyses. Such instances are noted at their proper places in this dictionary.
12. Some nouns have the same form in both numbers ; as, deer, sheep, swine, salmon, series, species, etc.

Rules for Forming Derivatives

1. Abstract nouns are regularly formed by adding the termination ness ; as good, goodness ; but sometimes they end in th ; as, length, from long, stealth from steal, etc. Abstract nouns borrowed from the Latin end variously ; as, justice, fortitude, liberty, etc.

2. Nouns denoting the use or habit of doing what the verb from which they are formed expresses, are generally formed by adding the termination -er to the verb ; as, teach, teacher. In words borrowed from the Latin, however, the termination -or is usually retained ; as, govern, governor ; aviate, aviator.

3. Nouns signifying action, as distinguished from the agent or doer, are regularly formed by adding the termination -ing, to a verb ; as, play, playing. Sometimes, however, they are formed by adding -ment, -age, -ance, -ery, etc. ; as, commandment, tillage, appearance, prudery, etc.

4. Many nouns derived from the Latin are formed by adding -ion to the verb ; as, correct, correction ; distort, distortion.

5. Nouns denoting character or habit are derived from verbs or adjectives, by adding -ard ; as, dote, dotard ; drunk, drunkard.

6. Adjectives are derived from nouns (1) by adding y ; as, health, healthy ; (2) by adding ous ; as, courage, courageous ; (3) by adding ful ; as, joy, joyful ; (4) by adding some ; as, toil, toilsome ; (5) by adding ish ; as, child, childish ; (6) by adding ly ; as, man, manly. Adverbs of quality are usually formed in this way ; (7) by adding able ; as, answer, answerable ; (8) by adding en ; as, gold, golden.

7. Verbs are sometimes derived from nouns, adjectives, and adverbs ; (1) without change of form ; as, salt, warm, forward ; (2) by lengthening the vowel or softening the consonant ; as, grass, graze ; (3) by adding en ; as, strength, strengthen.

8. Adverbs of quality or likeness are usually formed by adding the termination -ly to the positive adjective ; as, wise, wisely. In which case it is equivalent to after the manner of what the preceding word expresses ; or, in the manner or force and value of the preceding word. Adverbs which are thus formed from their adjectives without any variation of meaning, are frequently omitted in the dictionary, because the adjective sufficiently explains the word.

Division of Words into Syllables

As a general principle, it may be observed that the syllables of a word are those divisions which are made in a correct pronunciation of it. The following are, perhaps, the only definite rules that can be given on the subject :

1. Two consonants forming but one sound, as, ng, ch, th, ph, sh, wh, are never separated.

2. The termination -cean, -cian, -ceous, -cious, -cial, -tian, -tion, -tious, -tial, -geon, -gian, -geous, -gious, -sion, and -sier are seldom divided ; as, o-cean, na-tion, cap-tious, etc.

3. Compound words are commonly separated into the simple words of which they are composed ; as, care-less, bee-hive, rail-road.

4. The termination -ed, though not always pronounced separately, is regarded in writing as a distinct syllable ; as, love, lov-ed.

5. Derivative and grammatical terminations should generally be separated from the radical word ; as, great-ly, teach-er.

MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

MOTION-PICTURE machines are of various forms and are commonly known under the names of biograph, cinematograph, vitascope, etc. The device in all of them is practically the same, and consists of a mechanism by which a numerous series of photographs taken at rapid intervals, and representing some moving scene, is projected onto a screen at the same rapid rate at which they were taken, giving a moving representation of the original scene.

The pictures are contained on a film ribbon, there usually being fifteen pictures on every foot of ribbon which is coiled on a spool at the top of the machine. When the machine is set in motion the long band of ribbon is unwound and carried over a system of wheels and through a narrow upright clamp-like contrivance that brings it down to a strong magnifying lens behind which there is an electric or calcium burner, the light from which blazes fiercely through the translucent ribbon, and projects the pictures to a distant screen.

The machine is operated either by hand or a small motor, the film ribbon being rewound on a second spool after passing through the focus of the lens. The movement, though rapid, is intermittent, the ribbon moving the length of one photo or until exactly in focus, when it pauses for a fraction of a second and then advances until the next photo is in position, and so on. This intermittent motion coincides exactly with the operation of the shutter of the lantern, the shutter being closed while the ribbon is in motion and open during the pause, thus allowing each photo in turn to project its image on the screen when at rest. There being fifteen pictures to every foot of ribbon, the shutter is interposed fifteen hundred times while a hundred feet of ribbon is passing the lens.
